

Information Sheet No. 39

Children and adolescents in need of care

Due to a congenital illness, disability, accident or for any other reason, a need for care of children can exist.

The families are in such cases faced with complex challenges: What are the requirements for a degree of care for children? What kind of support do children need in day care and at school? Which custom-made aids or conversion measures are there for children and adolescents with a handicap? On these issues, the Consulting Centres in Berlin offer in-depth advice and support for families. This includes information on topics such as degree of care, home conversion measures and aids.

A very important aspect of consultation is the burden relief of family carers. This can be provided by care insurance benefits such as respite and short-term care as well as support and burden relief services. There are also special benefits for siblings.

The goal is to provide children and adolescent with personalized care to improve the living situation. They should be integrated into the help and care system and thus achieve greater independence in coping with everyday life.

Children grow and their needs may change over the years.

The Consulting Centres provide advice on the respectively suitable offers.

Socio-medical after-care

For up to 6 weeks after a hospital stay of the child, external supervision at home can be prescribed by specialized institutions that analyse the prescribed service needs, coordinate the prescribed services and provide support for the provision of the services.

Social Paediatric Centres

With a referral from the attending physician one can obtain from multi-professional teams specialized advice, diagnosis, therapy and early intervention.

Child and Adolescent Health Service

In each district preventive holistic health information and advice is available as well as medical examinations up to the age of 18.
