Advice and assistance for memory disorders in old age

More and more people are suffering from memory and orientation disorders in old age. These disorders may have a variety of causes. Greater care and attention will be needed if someone is no longer able with everyday life due to memory and orientation problems, if they are finding it harder to concentrate or if they cannot cope in new situations. The memory consultation service is available to provide clarity about these disorders and can also diagnose the extent and cause of the disorders.
